Short-Term Focus: Coping with Near-Term Fluctuations

- ▶ COMPASS counsels its clients to focus on meeting their long-term goals with long-term investment plans. A key ingredient for a successful investment strategy is to not allow short-term noise to alter this focus.
- ▶ When looking at a diversified portfolio comprised of 60% stocks and 40% bonds, there has been no 10-year period over the past 100 years that experienced a negative return.

Instant access to real-time quotes and media reports can make it difficult for investors with a long-term investment horizon to stay focused on their goals. In reality, these daily market movements may not be as extreme as they seem. As investors look longer term, their perception often changes. Short-term market fluctuations can be quite volatile, and the probability of realizing a loss within any given day is high. However, the likelihood of realizing a loss has historically decreased over longer holding periods. The image illustrates that while the probability of losing money on a daily basis over the past 20 years was 46%, the probability dropped dramatically when analyzing an annual time period—20%. Periodic review of an investment portfolio is necessary, but investors shouldn't let short-term swings affect their view of the future.

An investment cannot be made directly in an index. Returns and principal invested in stocks are not guaranteed. Probability of loss is calculated as the number of negative periods divided by the number of total periods using the specified frequency of data.
